Martine Ceberio is a very strict teacher but this is because she wants what's best for her students. She really wants everyone to learn the skills to be great in Computer Science. Would say the only way it could be any better is if she viewed the class as what it was "an introduction" and expects less. Her teaching is more based on her expecting us to know what to do and less of explaining and teaching us what we need to know.  The dynamic is different than most classes at any university. The fact that you are sitting in front of a computer to do much of your work. But ultimately leads to distractions throughout the lecture. I love the problem solving aspect of the class. But I believe the time spent the first couple of weeks on the algorithm and more on the phonics of individual commands and modules would be beneficial for me. Yes it is irritating but no offense at all but the monotone man is hard to watch and not drift away. I almost always get lost. Second complaint with this whole idea of syntax/phonics. THE BOOK ABSOLUTELY SUCKS to write the code. I mean taking notes out of any book is hard for any student. The book is a practice but it does not help to learning the actual JAVA. I had to spend money extra to buy a book. DR. Ceberio, is truly one of a kind, she will always help you. Sometimes blunt and always forward she was always willing to help. Extra hours on Saturdays and open door policy I was grateful for. Thank you  Homework expectations were too extreme. There's a limit as to how much you expect your students to do if you want them to do a decent job in which they actually learned about as opposed to just doing it with little to no knowledge of what the homework is expected of. It really is trying to teach you. No two people learn at the same pace and it's a college course. Understandable, it's supposed to be challenging, but there's a difference between challenging and unbearable.
